To get the most benefit from this course begin with the birth charts below. List your own date of birth below including the Month/Day/Year. Then list as many close family members: example your mother, your father, your children, spouse, siblings, best friends, or co-workers, so that when I cover the personality types in Videos 9, 10 and 11, you will gain more insight about your own innate gifts and also discover how to make your relationships the best they can be.

Once you have listed several names and their birth dates including your own, go to the birth charts #1, #2, #3, or #4 below and look up the dates according to their birth year to find their Element and Yin/Yang type. Your accuracy is important for you to gain the most insight when viewing these videos, so be prepared ahead of viewing with the birth dates of the people you interact with most often. It is fine to chart someone who has passed and may give you a deeper understanding of your relationship together.

Note: Men are listed in the center column, and women in the last far right column, as explained in Video 8.

*Note: The Chinese year for Feng Shui personality charting begins on February 5th of each year as indicated on the charts below. If someone's birthdate is in January, it is included in the line above (example: a person born January 20, 1977, would be located on the birth chart within the period Feb. 5, 1976 – Feb. 4, 1977 – males are a Metal Yang Type and Females are Fire Yang Type) see the chart below to confirm how to properly access the information.

As you look up each person on your list come back and enter their Element Type and Yin or Yang Type in the list below.

On the four birth charts below look up your month and year of birth to determine your element, and yin and yang type. Males are in the center column and females are in the far right column. Use the section below to list names and birthdates of people you would like to chart.

Name:	Date of Birth (Month/Date/Year):	Male/Female Element Type -	Yin/Yang Type:

Look up your month and year of birth on the charts below to determine your element, and yin and yang type. Males are in the center column and females are in the far right column.
